- 16 Shots of Coffee You get 4 cups of coffee for this.
- This is the very famous series. *SWERY's Choice Costume Set -4 Cups of Coffee. is a parody of either SWERY's Choice Costume 1.5 Classic and Max Crew. Can not stop laughing and crying, this is such a stupid item (I am a dog, I can not drink coffee), I really want to get this item to enjoy it while the little noob users made this set. to be honest who needed this set? the costume set from SWERY is much cooler for me, it can be a little bit slow to drink coffee if to prepare a few times per day, but this set is nothing but a joke, it is meant for laughed at, then take it is broken, make your fans laugh, I do not like it and I do not want it at all. -----
- - - - Do you know what coffee does in this game? it gives white weapons effect, and light weapon effect. so you get white in the hand when tapping or shooting now. Simple joke, fools. I swear, if this set was a real set I would go crazy and sell for 100 dollars, it has everything you need, a funny title of course, and absolutely no need in an item. I think it's a great idea, because players who make this set think of some funny things to add to the package, and also encourage other players to buy this item. This is a great item for the day when you get a bit bored, and start playing and making crazy stuff. And most importantly, this set is cost-effective, like almost all of the SWERY sets So this set is absolutely perfect to drink coffee, you can make it while playing, it fits in your hand, you do not need to store it in a golden ornament, it is also super easy to make with a little effort, as I've said before, the title and subtitle are quite funny and needed, the only problem is that it's up for sale at cheap prices, if they were to prepare, they would instantly make 10 times more money, but since they're making 10 pounds it sucks, I think it's perfect, you get a set that rivals SWERY*

The Official Soundtrack for "RUNNING WITH RIFLES: EDELWEISS" lends music to the tale of Allied forces as they made their journey across Europe late in WW2. Illustrating their heroism in their drive to stop evil from conquering the world, the music transitions from more humble beginnings to rising tension as they close in on Germany itself. The soundtrack includes all mission loading tracks from the game, victory cues, the three action cues for "boss" battles, and a handful of bonus cues from RUNNING WITH RIFLES: PACIFIC. RUNNING WITH RIFLES: EDELWEISS Official Soundtrack is composed by Karl Feuerstake. With purchasing the OST, you support our artist's work, thank you! These mate patterns arise in every game at some stage. But knowing where to look and why it happens is the next step. For many players the vast majority of mating patterns are unfamiliar because they have not been drawn up and positioned using the parameters of the book. Therefore, the object of this new tutorial is to demonstrate how to construct a game so that the mating patterns occur in the position where they occur in games and to teach you to recognize the shapes and colors they have when they are in front of your eyes, as well as on the chess board. Moreover, you will learn the specific mating patterns that are used against your king. Basically, if your king is in mortal danger why not mate your enemy by fixing the fatal flaw in his or her play? Therefore, this PowerPlay Tutorial volume 1 will focus on "how to spot the mating patterns." Let's look at the mating pattern before we examine the mating patterns we see throughout our games. Place your pieces as in the diagram above. The white king is in danger of falling because his queen has been placed on a4 and the white knight on h3 is weak. No matter how hard we try, we cannot prevent his demise. The same is true for the black king. The rook and the knight are in the way of the little black queen. Can you see the mate? What's new:

Alisa Quest is a fictional character in the long-running British science fiction television programme Doctor Who (known as the "Search for the Doctor" in the United States). She originally appeared in the Virgin New Adventures novels Torchwood and Kingdom of the Wicked, but for her first appearance as a part of the main series she was introduced as a companion of the Eighth Doctor in the 2013-14 series Doctor Who. From the fourth series onwards, she followed the Ninth Doctor as his companion. In February 2020, Alisa was revealed to be one of the seven Princesses of Hell in the £1,000 Eighth Doctor T-shirt. Appearances

Television Alisa Quest first appeared in Virgin Missing Adventures book The Blue Angel. She appeared in the UK release of the Doctor Who Virgin New Adventures book, Torchwood. She has also appeared in the Doctor Who novels, Turlough, The Crimson Shadow and the two-part fiction novel, Kingdom of the Wicked, written by Justin Richards which depicts events before her first regular appearances. The 2013 series of Doctor Who features the return of Alisa and her companions as the Doctor (Matt Smith) and his new protege takes over. The Doctor establishes a relationship with Alisa at the outset of the series and after a brief hiatus begins a series of adventures with her, culminating in their first televised episode in the fourth series in autumn 2013. The TV adaptation of Alisa's character arc was drawn from the events in The Crimson Shadow, reusing the concept of the Ultra-violet Light Missile and developing it into a plot. The fourth series saw Alisa and the Doctor meeting for the first time. In an episode later in the fifth season, it is revealed that Alisa now owns a shopping centre called The Quest. The Doctor later becomes intrigued by this, and he consults her about this in the episode "The Crimson Horror", which featured Quentin Crisp as The Monster. When she says that she doesn't like the term "shopping centre" because it implies a place where people buy things and not places where people take comfort and find safety, the Doctor demands to know her real name, only for her to respond that she doesn't have one. This revelation indirectly reveals her connection to Al-Hirak, the Turkish word for "Question", which Alisa asked the Doctor about. In the light of positive comments towards her characterisation in the US edition of Doctor Who Magazine, Alisa was, in February 2014,

An operation designed to reduce the size of the German Kharkov operational-strategic reserves. The goal of the offensive was to reduce the size of German Kharkov reserves. In turn, the main blow was directed against Kharkov. On the left flank the divisions of the 3rd Romanian Corps and the 43rd Romanian Infantry Corps would attack in the Kharkov salient (Berezina mountains) to the east of the city. South of Kharkov was the 51st Romanian Corps, which would attack in the Shklo area and possibly reach the area of Kharkov from the north. The 5th Romanian Corps had its main attack in the Krasnobavarsky district of Kharkov, cutting off the breakout routes from the city, as well as the bridgehead of the 52nd Romanian Corps along the Uda from Sokol region to Shpakovka. The regrouped troops of this area would have to reach the city, thus reinforcing the main blow. Any German units left behind would be destroyed by tanks and the artillery of the corps. The main blow would be directed towards the south from the southwest, and towards the east from the southeast. The exact route is to be chosen as there were a number of possible routes, as well as several small roads, which would make the task of tank units difficult. The course of the main blow was chosen based on the data obtained in the reconnoiter. The plan for the offensive (August 22, 1943) was a repeated offensive action conducted by 10 divisions (4 infantry divisions and 6 gds), The plan was based on a concentric movement, where the divisions from the east and the south would first cross the Soviet rear, then attack the enemy forward of the main forces. The attack was to be directed at the enemy in his positions in the general area of Kharkov. In addition to the main blow, the detachments of some units would also attack, primarily to destroy the enemy forward detachments, such as the enemy during the approach to the city, destroy bridges and railroad crossing over the Berezina River. The operation was designed to eliminate the entire enemy group (regardless of the final destination). Player Experience: Performing the plan of the operation and winning it will be extremely difficult for the player, because the German forces in the operation area are very dispersed. They are divided between units of various units, the majority of which are dispersed behind the defense of the main force of the Axis.
