The cytosineintercalated 3' G-tetrad is located at the G-tetrad flipped structure.](jp -2012-14897a 0002){#fig2} In the G-tetrad flipped structure, Tstacking and G--G base pairs of the DNA were partially broken. This results in the loss of the threecenters of intercalation. In such a structure, the energy barrier for cleavage reaction is lower. This is consistent with the observed propensity of T-stacking and G--G base pairs to be broken. In the DNA hairpin structure, two face-to-face guanine bases at the 3'-end of the DNA can induce the local opening of the double helix structure. This results in the partial loss of the hydrophobic stacking of bases and interaction of bases. Such opening of the double helix can provide favorable energetics of the subsequent furan linkage. The opening and closing of the double helix can play crucial roles in DNA damage. Finally, we should mention an additional possibility: the furan linker may bind the T-stacked DNA structure by forming a hybrid structure between DNA and the furan linker. In this case, the binding of furan linker should be in the form of a hairpin structure. The hybrid structure can increase the efficiency of furan linkage,
