The exact same statement used in the article can be seen on the exact same page as well. I'm a high school girl that likes to paint and draw. I have been painting since I was about 8 years old...no, 7.5 years old. I draw animals of all kinds, nature as well as people and fantasy. I have also done some wiggle-pants; an abstract portrait of a dancing teapot. I am also studying oil painting. I am also half-monkey, so I think I'll draw that in. I'm also an artist; I am a part of this event. So I thought I'd jump in on this little fad. Have a look at my work, and if you want to talk or email me, feel free to say so. Once you have customized your time-lapse shots to each of your scenes, it is time to add the thumbnails to your timeline. Here you can put the most important elements in your timeline, for example: The name of the video (can include the year, month, day, hour, and minute), and the GPS data so you can tag your videos and then find them again. Once you have everything prepared, hit the record button! Now we will go through the details of how to generate custom thumbnails for your time-lapse with a few easy steps.

Step 1: Click on the Thumbnails button in the Lapse Creator, and choose the videos you wish to update. Step 2: Drag the video out of the list and place it in the timeline. Step 3: Select the video by clicking on the gear icon next to the video file, and then add a custom thumbnail. Step 4: You can change the size, quality, and file name of the thumbnail by clicking on the settings button next to it. Step 5: Now that you have finished all you need to do is save and share! Click on the Files Menu button on the top of the screen and click the Export button. On the bottom of the Export window, choose the format and language you wish to export your video. Step 6: After you have saved and exported the file, just click the Share button to view your work!]]> to Make High Quality Time-lapse Videos With DSLR's

Q: Why is this paint not showing on touchup event in WPF? I have this window below and I have bound the DataContext to the Window object. For some reason, the Drop.IsMouseDown is false (I can see the arrow on the screen if I move my mouse around on the window), but the Paint event is not firing. If I drag a pen with the mouse on the window, the paint event is fired normally. What am I missing?
