An extensive feature overview can be found at the Adobe Photoshop Web site. The site also has tutorials in many languages that make Photoshop accessible for all. Once you start using Photoshop, you may be hooked for life. Learn by Using It's recommended that a user follow Photoshop's Basic Training tutorials to learn Photoshop's key features. The tutorials are similar to beginning software manuals, and help train users in the program's capabilities. After that, Photoshop's features begin to unfold as users start to experiment with some of the program's tools. Each chapter of Photoshop's user manual has a corresponding tutorial to show users how to use a specific feature. This layered approach allows users to start with the basics and work their way up as they become more adept with the program's tools. For example, a beginner can learn how to select an object by selecting the first tool on the left (the Lasso tool) and using the F8 key to move the selection. Over time, they will learn how to use Photoshop's features until they eventually have the program running on auto-pilot. Learning Photoshop's tools is a step-by-step process that requires a beginner to try each tool and evaluate its result. Users can examine the effects of each tool in more detail in the Photoshop Reference Library. This library is a repository of Adobe's training guides and tutorials that are grouped into sections like "understand light and shadow" or "draw a wolf." Each topic includes a tutorial for each tool that provides an in-depth, detailed approach to learning how to use that tool. The Photoshop Reference Library is the perfect tool for a professional photographer or artist who wants to learn how to use Photoshop. They can see the results of each tool and step-by-step how to use the tool. Many beginner tutorials also include an animated video to provide an easy-to-follow tutorial. (This is a great benefit to novice users, but video tutorials are not available for every tool.) The tutorials available from various topics will help you master a particular tool in Photoshop. This approach, however, is not consistent, and will not teach you how to use Photoshop's toolbox to create a finished image. A user must also manually use tools to create and apply effects like these in Photoshop. The Photoshop toolbox provides a variety of tools that facilitate creating and editing images. Some of the tools are created for specific purposes, but the toolbox provides all of Photoshop's

Picosecond photon avalanche diodes for timing experiments. A large number of fast timing experiments in the X-ray domain are made possible by using X-ray photon avalanche diodes as a fast and sensitive detector for photon counting at few tens of GHz repetition rates. A monolithic diode with a low capacitance and a trapezoidal profile is presented. With a 300 microm thickness and a flat top surface, it combines the best features of such devices as easy handling and short rise times with a fast recovery time.

AAAS Releases First Official ‘Science Talent Search’ List The annual “Science Talent Search” was started in 1986 by AAAS President Edward E. Steiner and now brings out the high school students (or their schools) with the greatest interest in science. The list is compiled by the AAAS Committee on Science Talent Searching (CSTS) based on a questionnaire administered by the Science Talent Search program staff. The list of over 1,000 students was unveiled at the AAAS Annual Meeting in San Francisco (Aug. 18–22) at the annual meeting session of CSTS. The list is available in both the hard copy and online formats. The full list in PDF is available here. The AAAS lists the top science related areas as biochemistry, genetics, microbiology, and molecular biology. From the student’s list compiled by the AAAS, a winner is chosen in each category. The winner in each category takes home an all-expense-paid trip to Washington, D.C. for the “Conference on Science Talent Search,” where they will have the opportunity to meet and interact with AAAS and other leaders in academia. The winner in each category will also receive a $5,000 college scholarship. Also, each year an AAAS Student Travel Grant is awarded to the top student in each category.
